

BUSINESS IS BOOMING

English meaning of "business is booming" (expr.) sales are very good; the company is doing very well; the business is making a lot of money.

Nautical A spar extending usually from a mast to hold the foot, clew, or tack of a sail. As for their newfangled extras, the British regulator, which uses a traffic-light system to grade 11 popular IVF add-ons, has yet to give one a green light, meaning it is both safe and effective. CHA Fertility, in Los Angeles, has been accused of implanting the wrong embryos, which led to the birth mother having to give up twins who were genetically related to two other couples. If this feels like a spa rather than surgery, that is the idea. These positive business increases can place a strain on a lean staff. Like motorists and asset managers, most claim above-average results. Meanwhile, the U. Some puddles of vomit. To make a deep, resonant sound. Identify inefficiencies and address them While it is important to expand human capital resources while profits are up, companies should not forget to examine whether or not employees have the tools they require for continued success. Build and nurture the culture Too often, employees complain the unique culture that brought them to a much smaller company disappeared once the organization went on a hiring spree. A spar that connects the tail surfaces and the main structure of an airplane. Doing this may also assist retention efforts by giving long-term employees new opportunities to expand their knowledge and grow. Cross-train and promote Finally, companies should be mindful of key specialized roles in the company so that if any of those employees suddenly depart, operations can continue without interruption. Idiom: To act suddenly and forcefully to repress a practice or reprimand an offender; crack down. In Denmark, Israel and Japan the figure is more than one in 25 and rising. It may come in years, a matter of weeks or even days. Having the right people in the right jobs is critical to ensuring a healthy business future. They ensure enough employees are on hand to react to increased demand for products and services. These plans identify and respond to new opportunities and trends. And business, Atamer says, is booming. Perhaps now is a good time to make software improvements or replace the aging computer system that supports the entire company.